Fall Program

“OCD and the Family”

Denise Polce, MA, TLLP and Toni Lupro-Ali

OCD is a cruel and isolating disorder, and it is devastating not just for individual sufferers, but to their families as well. In their efforts to ease the suffering of their loved one, family members often turn to reassurance, accommodation, or even assistance with rituals in the belief that they are making things easier for the sufferer. They are not. Such actions only serve to feed the OCD. So what does family involvement need to look like? How can we provide real help to our loved ones without enabling them? This will be an interactive program. We will watch a video on the subject, then present scenarios for group discussion and answer your questions. Don't miss this program. Its success depends on YOU.
